CARRY ON VAST PROPAGANDA

Islam Fraternities Factors of Great Importance Throughout the Whole Mohammedan Werld.

A spiritual factor of great importance in the Mohammedan world is the fraternities. Islam siways had tre fraternities, but the two which did the most for its religious and political revival came into existence about the middle of the Nineteenth centurythe Sennussiya and the Djemal-od-Din. writes Rev. Amos L Dushaw in the Christian Herald.

The founder of the Sennussiya was Beyld Mohammed Sennussi, a descendant of the prophet and a man of learning, plety and position. It was strict ly puritanic in character and now. eighty years old is exerting a great ternity has lodges scattered throughout the whole of laim, but El Sennussi, the present leader, has a firm hold on the whole movement and he has kept it from political alliances, Islamic and Christian. He is aiming at a spiritual revival of his people because he feels that Islam cannot re gain its complete political indepen-dence without its old spiritual life. In word, the Sennusal fraternity is doing preparatory work. It is also carrying on a trem missionary propagands and converting millions of pagen negroes to its faith. Djemal-ed-Din, unlike Sennussi, was less of a theologian and more of a political propagandist, feared and perlam's danger and worked hard to stir it up to action. Stoddart says. "It is not too much to my that he is the father of every shade of Egyptian nationalism." His influence did not end with Egypt. Djemai-ed-Din was no wild fanatic. He knew the forces that faced the Islam world and, like Sennussi, only dealing with political matters, he offered advice of real value to his people. "It is plain that the whole Moslem world must unite in a great defensive alliance to preserve itself from destruction; and to do this it must acquire the ter western progress and learn the sear-of European power."
